A DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.

The Narrow Escape of a Gentleman From a Fearful Fate.

A very distressing accident by which a gentleman nearly lost his life and a family in the city lost a pleasant visitor, and the city a permanent resident, happened last night on South Eleventh Street, near the intersection of Fifteenth street. The gentleman's name was Richard Y. Grant, Jr., of Schenectady, New York, from which place he came a week ago last Thursday, to visit a former friend in Schenectady, a Mr. James Coleman, on Seventeenth street, and with the intention of investing here and making it his home, for which purpose he had been in communication with real estate men. Mr. Grant was a gentleman well connected at home and a part of the Grant family of Schenectady, celebrated for a great many years. Last night at about half past ten he left the vicinity of the Cotton Belt depot to return to the home of Mr. Coleman, where he was stopping. We say was stopping, for he is there no more; he did not even eat breakfast there this morning. The night was very dark, but Mr. Grant proceeded on his way without mishap till he reached the spot on Eleventh street mentioned at the beginning of this narrative. There are no street crossings there and Mr. Grant was obliged to cross the street, which he attempted, having selected the best spot possible in the mist and darkness. It seemed to him a dry spot, but unfortunately he had made but a few steps ere he found that what he had taken to be dryness was wetness, and, in the middle of the street, he felt himself sinking. Mr. Grant made a strong effort to extricate himself from the mud, losing both boots in his struggles, which proved unavailing, as he found himself sinking deeper and deeper. He paused for a moment to take breath and think what he should do, and the pause was a fatal mistake, for, by the time he had collected his faculties he was sunk in the mud to his waist, and was sinking an inch every minute. The most frantic struggles failed to move a limb, while the tenacious mud was sucking him down and holding him with a grasp of iron. Thoroughly alarmed, Mr. Grant began to cry out, first faintly, and then, as the awful truth came to him that he was sinking into a bottomless pit, with blood-curdling screams. The neighborhood was alarmed, the striking of matches and lighting of lamps was seen in a score of houses. Men emerged from the houses and rushed out into the street dishabille, in quickly gathered garments and some without any at all. A dozen men rushed to the spot to see and prevent a tragedy and their faces paled, for by this time Mr. Grant's shoulders, neck and head were the only visible part of his body, and his screams were getting faint from the terrible pressure of mud on his body. Planks were brought and thrown in the street on which men stepped carefully with the intention of getting a rope around the unfortunate man's body. This was found impracticable and pieces of scantling were found and used. By means of these, the ends of which were pressed under Mr. Grant's arm, he was raised a little, a rope was got about him, and by the united effort of ten men he was in a quarter of an hour dragged from what in a few minutes would have been his tomb. He was very much exhausted but received every attention, the mud was scraped from him externally and stimulants administered internally and in an hour he was able to proceed on his way. Mr. Coleman's family was in bed when he reached the house but they awoke, opened the door and bade him come in. He refused and asked for his valise. He would give no explanation, but insisted on having his valise which was brought to him, and without a word except of thanks to the family for their kind treatment of him he turned away and hurried to the Missouri Pacific depot. He took the midnight train in a roundabout way and by the time that everyone in the city will be reading this, Mr. Richard Y. Grant will be on his way to Schenectady, New York. It used to be the custom when a man got mired at a place to shake the dust of that place from his feet. That was a dry country and Mr. Grant was obliged to scrape off the mud instead of shaking off the dust. A gentleman who knew him and chanced to be at the depot conversed with him a minute as the train was coming in. He asked him if he expected to return to Waco. Mr. Grant replied that he would come back in 1888, or it not then a few years later. The gentleman was surprised at the reply and the sarcastic tone in which it was uttered, but supposed Mr. Grant had been drinking and thought no more of it.

Thanksgiving Service.

The Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and Cumberland Presbyterian congregations will meet in a union thanksgiving service at the Austin street Presbyterian church to-morrow at 11 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. R. C. Burleson will preach the sermon, and the pastors of the several churches will take part in the service.

Mrs. Laimour's Funeral.

The funeral of Mrs. William W. Laimour, took place at 10 o'clock this morning at her late residence, corner of Washington and Sixth streets, in the presence of many sorrowing friends. The service was conducted by Rev. M. T. Martin, who only a few weeks before had performed the marriage ceremony for her. The remains were interred in Oakwood cemetery to which place they were followed by a long and mournful cortege.

The Minstrels.

At last something has been found that will draw through the all pervading mud of Waco. It's the Good-year, Cook & Dillon minstrels which appeared at The Garland last night before a large audience. The gallery was jammed and most of the seats in the lower portion of the house were occupied. The performance was something decidedly new and pleasing in the burnt cork line and the house did not fail to attest its appreciation of jokes, hits and "gags" that were decidedly youthful and fresh. The olog dancing was something never before seen in Waco and was full of merit. Thorn the juggler gave an exhibition of skill that was astounding and this feature alone was more than worth the admission. George H. Edwards was as imitable as ever. Edwards has got the negro dialect, walk, look and general carriage down so fine that he can put a plantation "coon" to the blush. The banjo performance of Leach Brothers drew the greatest praise and the performance of Welby & Pearl was good. Charles Goodyear filled his part of the bill in a manner that won the generous approbation of the audience. The entire performance was artistic and meritorious. "St. Perkins" to-morrow night. Tickets now on sale.

Capt George A. King, of Marlin, who was one of the heaviest losers by last Wednesday morning's fire, is in the city. Capt. King is one of those men not to be conquered by adversity and misfortune and though he had not a dollar of insurance on his building or stock, he is preparing to rebuild at once and has already resumed business. He will replace his old frame house with a handsome brick edifice and his visit to Waco on this occasion is to consult on architect as to plans. The genial Captain has a host of friends in Waco who are always glad to meet him.

The ladies have been kept within doors for a long time by the bad weather and will turn out in force to the great State Fair and Opening of the Waco Furniture Company which commences to-morrow.

A hack horse can stand much but there is a limit even to that poor animal's endurance and last night one poor woe-begone looking horse stopped on Austin Street and calmly laid down in the mud.
Lookout for the grand opening and State Fair at the Waco Furniture Company commencing to-morrow. It will last three days.
At last the Waco Furniture company will have fine weather for their grand opening and State Fair.
